Nureddin Ali's Burial

By F. A. MITCHEL

A revolution in Turkey had been unsuccessful, and a large number of persons implicated in it were to be executed. The common method of killing political prisoners was topping off their heads, but in this case the suitan was so enraged with the revolutionists that he determined to hang them. In order to get through with the matter and have it off his mind, the communder of the faithful ordered that they all be disposed of at once in a public place in order to impress the people with the fact that they had better not try any more revolutions.

Nureddin All, a young man of great promise, had been mixed up in the affair and was one of these who were to be hanged. He had only one wife to mourn his loss-an advantage of menogamy-but he had recently married her, and they loved each other very dearly. The morning apon which his execution was to take place she went tweether was a harmonic flow of the state of the state of the Stock nam County; I hereby amounce my candidacy for the office of County Tax Collection, was a harmonic flow of the Demwas a heartrending scene, at the end of p. m. which Nureddin sald:

An immense crowd had gathered to witness it, and To the Democratic Voters of Putnam the soldlers conducting the prisoners were obliged to use force to make a way for them. Once at the place of execution, they were drawn up in four ranks, some sixty men in each rank, before the gallows, when the work was commenced.

Those in the front rank were first ated. dispatched, but as from five to ten minutes were required to hang each man a great deal of time was consumed. For that reason the killing began early in the morning. When the front rank had been finished Nureddle was in the second rank, in order to prolong his life so far as possible, managed to drop back into the third.

As the work went on the people kept pressing against the soldiers, who stood behind the rear rank of prisoners, and the latter grow thed of keeping them back. The consequence was that the rest part of the group of prisoners after a while became disarranged.

Nureldin, while the second rank was being strong up managed to slip back into the fourth rank. Noti ing that behind it was a mission of guards and citizens, it occurred to him that if he could get mixed up with the intter he night possibly silds out and escape He wormed blinself back and was about to take position when a guard saw him and ordered him to get back 🛂 • into line. He did so, but kept his eye open for another opportunity.

More than a hundred men had dangled, and a great deal of time had been consumed. Every one was fired except those in the crowd, which was constantly changing. The guards, who were keeping back the speciators, were the most tired of all. Nureddin, taking advantage of this fact, tried again to get back among the citizens and this time succeeded. Without walting he turned his face to the rear. pushed aside a fat woman and an eager boy and in a twinkling was lost among the sen of beings about the gallows.

Meanwhile Fatima had gone to the cemetery to make arrangements for her husband's interment. She had bought a small lot and had ordered a coffin, which was delivered at the cemetery, for the authorities had informed her that her husband's body would be turned over to her there.

Fatima was standing boside the grave watching men open it. They had sunk it midway. The coffin was resting beside it. Suddenly the poor woman was astonished to see her husband coming toward her. Supposing the apparition was the ghost of Nureddin, who kad been executed, and was coming to be inid away, she fell in a faint. Fatima, who by this time had recovered something of her equanimity, put the cover on it loosely. Then she directed the gravediggers to throw on some earth while she gathered loose the some earth while she gathered loose brush. This she put on the earth and covere' it with dry grass, scattering loose son on the top. Nureddin could easily remove all this if he was in danger of smothering.
